FUSION & ETHNIC FOUNDATIONS

AFRICAN:

Earthy movements, body isolations, rhythmic clapping, improvisation

EUROPEAN:

Irish Jig, English Clog, ballet technique

LATIN & CARIBBEAN:

In the 1940s, dance forms from Afro-Haitian and Latin American cultures began to merge with jazz dance. These styles rejuvenated jazz's primitive and earthy qualities, introducing drumming as a primary musical source and adding vibrant energy to the movement vocabulary.

INDIAN:

Around the 1940s, West Indian dance forms also fused with jazz. Pioneering jazz choreographer Jack Cole studied East Indian linear dance movements, incorporating them into his technique. His research laid the groundwork for Matt Mattox's jazz style, which emphasized body isolation and geometric movement design. As described in Jumping into Jazz.

EGYPTIAN:

Stylized poses and visual aesthetics. By the 1970s, breakdance had become a major influence on jazz dance. Interestingly, breakdance itself drew inspiration from Egyptian art and movement aesthetics, adding another layer of cultural depth to jazz's evolution.

1970S FUSION:

Breakdance, disco, aerobic dance, street styles.
